

USDA Names JMH as Woman-Owned Contractor of the Year

JMH Education was honored as the USDA Woman-Owned Contractor of the Year during a ceremony in Washington, DC. This award is in recognition of JMH's extraordinary client service, creativity and ability to achieve results. JMH also received USDA's Group Honor Award for Excellence in 2004.

JMH's "reach and teach" approach delivers key messages to those places where true change happens: schools, families, and communities. In this way, JMH empowers our clients' target audiences to become actively involved with their messages.

JMH Education was founded in 1980 by Janice Hamilton, herself an educator and director of consumer marketing for a Fortune 500 Company. Thirty years later, JMH continues to specialize in creating customized education programs on behalf of corporations, government agencies and not-for-profit organizations. From social media to hands-on experiences, education marketing cuts through the clutter and connects with the audience because the information is coming from a trusted source.
